I find it distressing that some of the people responsible for creating an inclusive ethnic studies program are stubbornly demanding that their personal biases be included.

They are part of a select group tasked with creating a good-faith program—insuring that all children learn about their classmates' ethnicities and that all children also feel good about their own.

What is preventing such an inclusive curriculum? The demand by a few to include their own personal prejudice—to the detriment of some children. One wonders: who are these adults, so poisoned by their own hatreds, yet so determined to indoctrinate young minds with their own poisoned hatreds.

It's clear the ESMC 'committee' members do not share the same goal. Some members claim the right" to slip in propaganda and/or disparaging, untrue statements, especially of the anti-Israel, antisemitic kind.

I hope that, eventually, California will create an ethnic studies program that every teacher, parent, and student can be proud of.
